

HELLO AND WELCOME

Welcome to our first public event on the Cundy Street Quarter.

We are at a very early stage in developing our ideas for the Cundy Street Quarter.

Our ambition is to create an inclusive mixed-use neighbourhood, potentially including a range of new homes, community facilities, public green spaces, shops and more.

TODAY WE WANT TO HEAR FROM YOU

We would like to learn about your priorities for the area and understand more about the amenities you use locally.

Tell us how you think the area could be improved, and the benefits you would like to see brought forward.

Please speak to the team, who can talk you through the content and answer any questions you might have.

As part of Grosvenor's commitment to the area, we are donating £10,000 to be divided between three local charities. By providing your ideas on the Cundy Street Quarter you will have the opportunity to choose how this donation is shared between them.

Please leave your comments on a feedback form or online at: www.cundystreetquarter.com

The Cundy Street Quarter is an area in Southern Belgravia that is bordered by Ebury Street, Cundy Street and Pimlico Road

HISTORY OF THE CUNDY STREET QUARTER

1760s

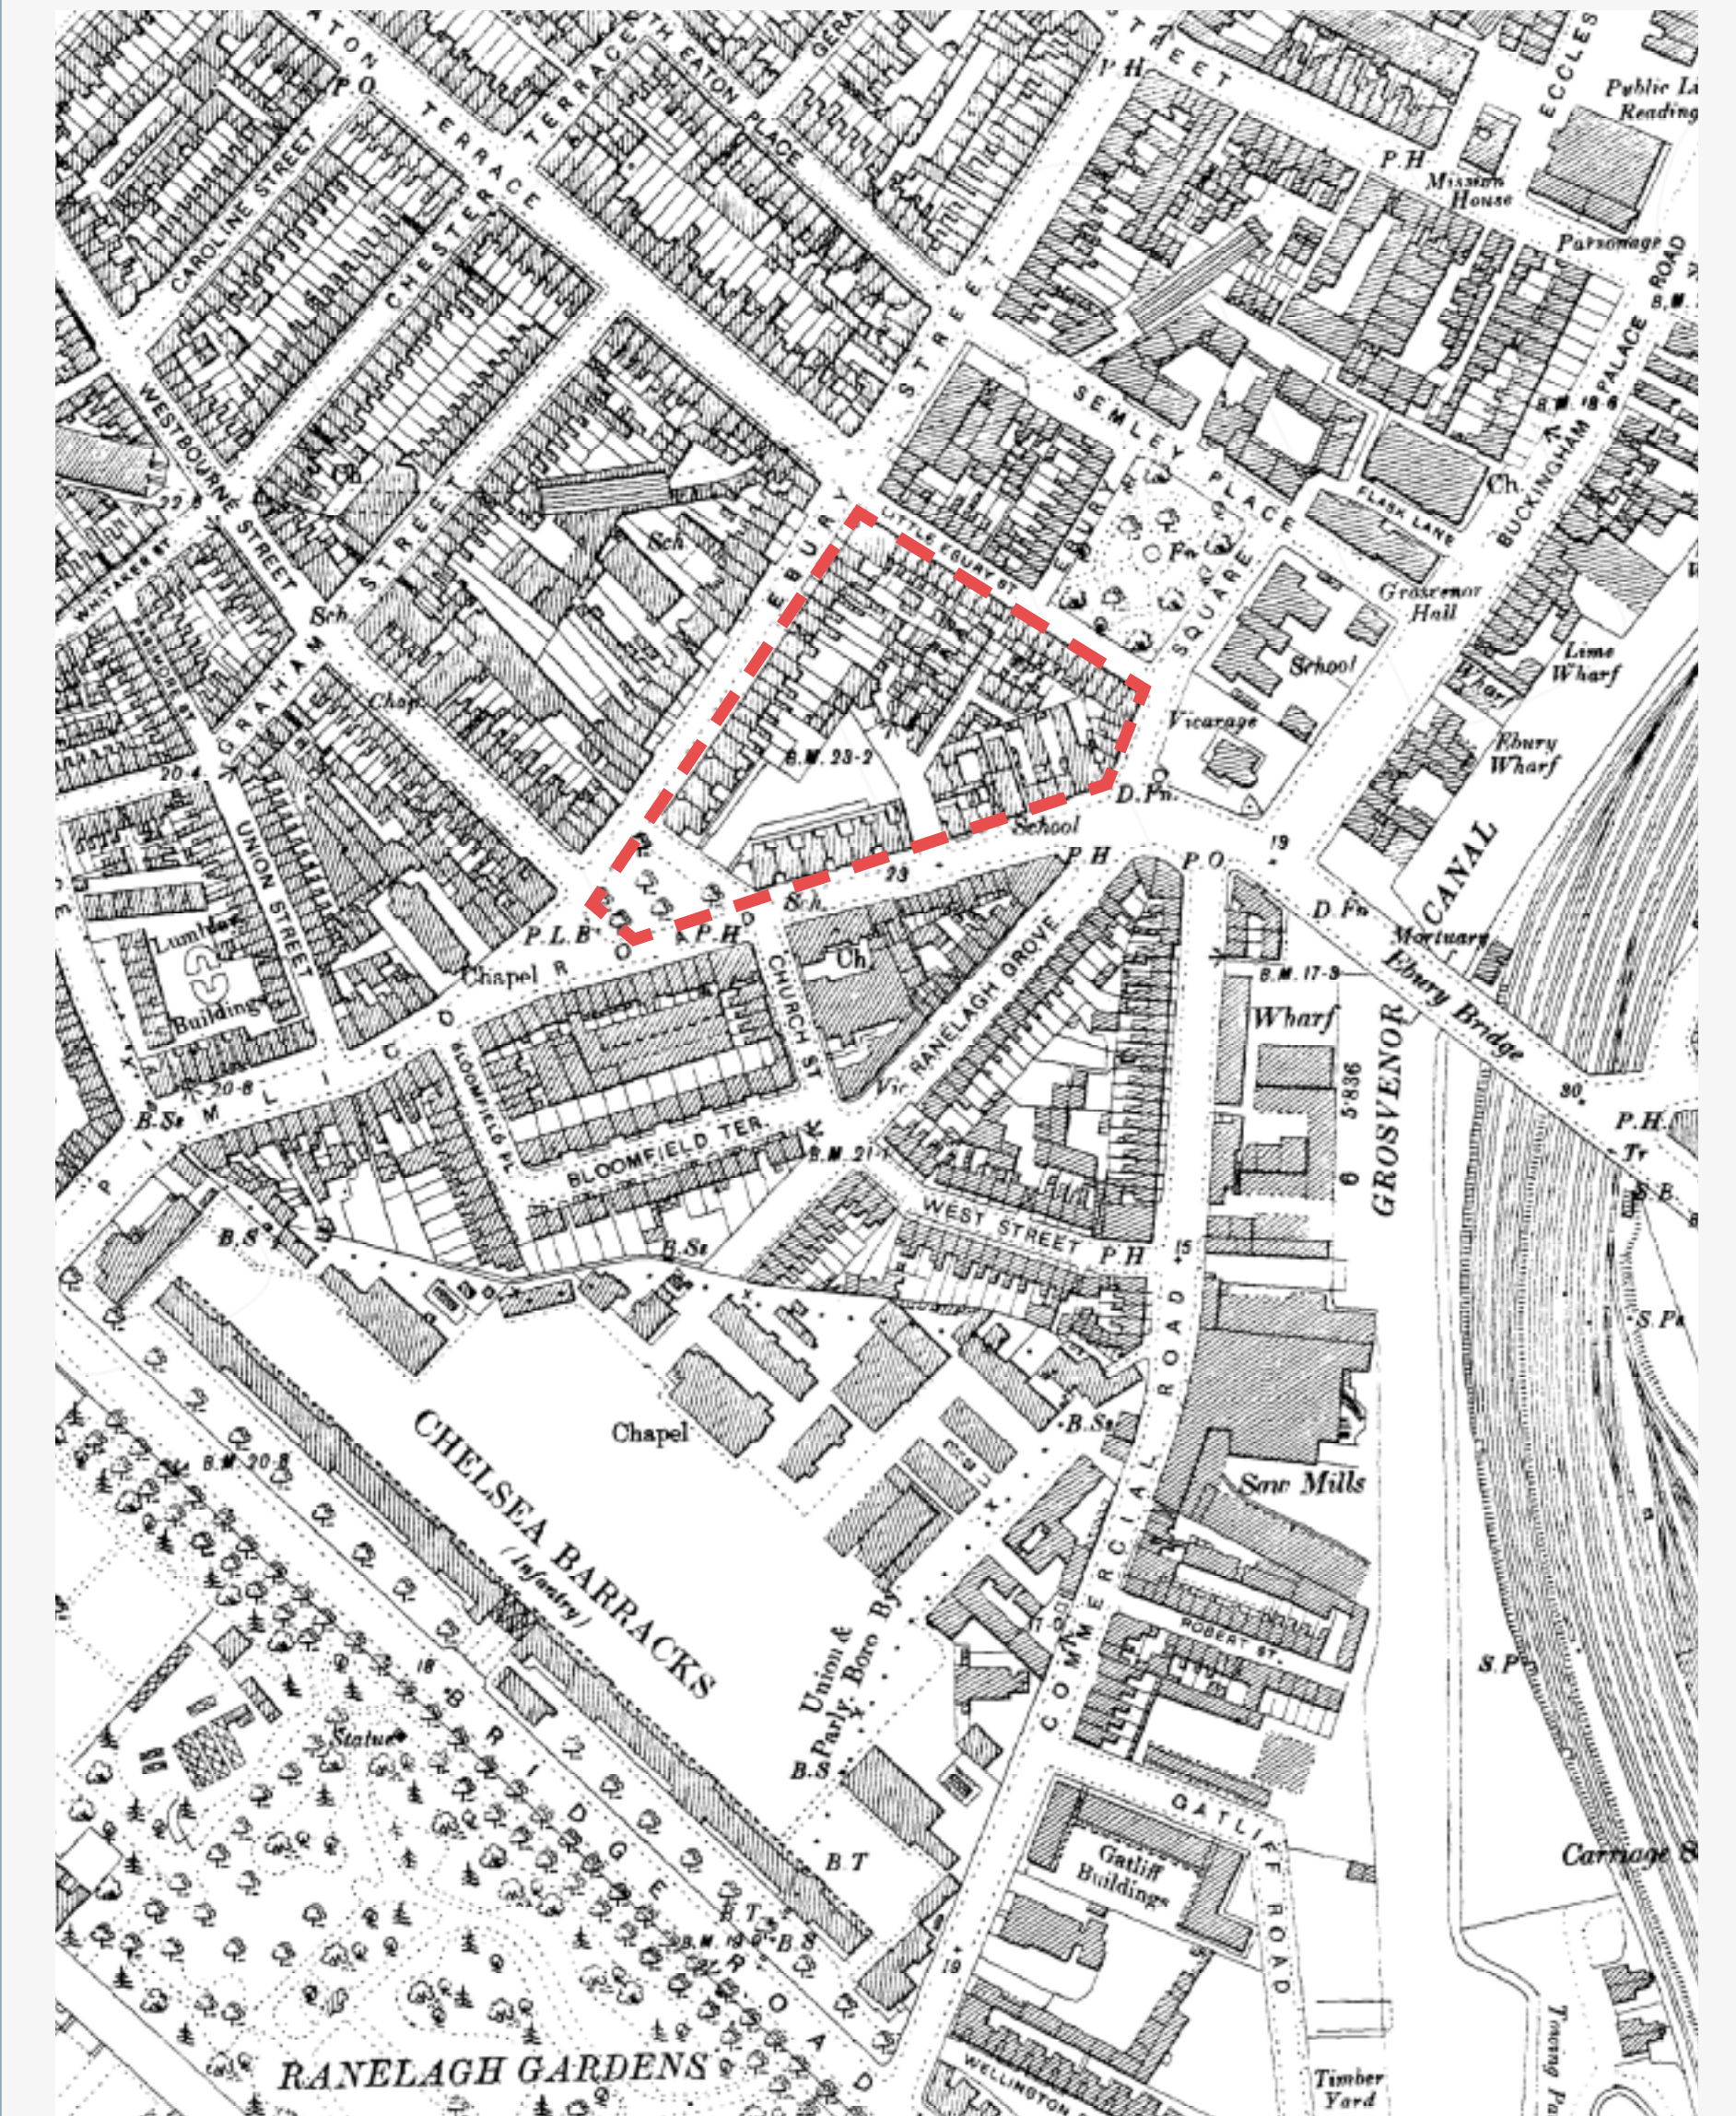

The present-day Ebury Street is recorded on the map as Five Fields' Row. It was in one of the houses on the west of the street that eight-year-old Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart composed his first symphony in 1764.

1870s

The Cundy Street Quarter was fully developed and more densely occupied. Cundy Street was called Little Ebury Street. The map shows a number of lanes running between the homes, creating a route from Ebury Square to modern day Orange Square. These included Elizabeth Place, King Street and Clifford Row.

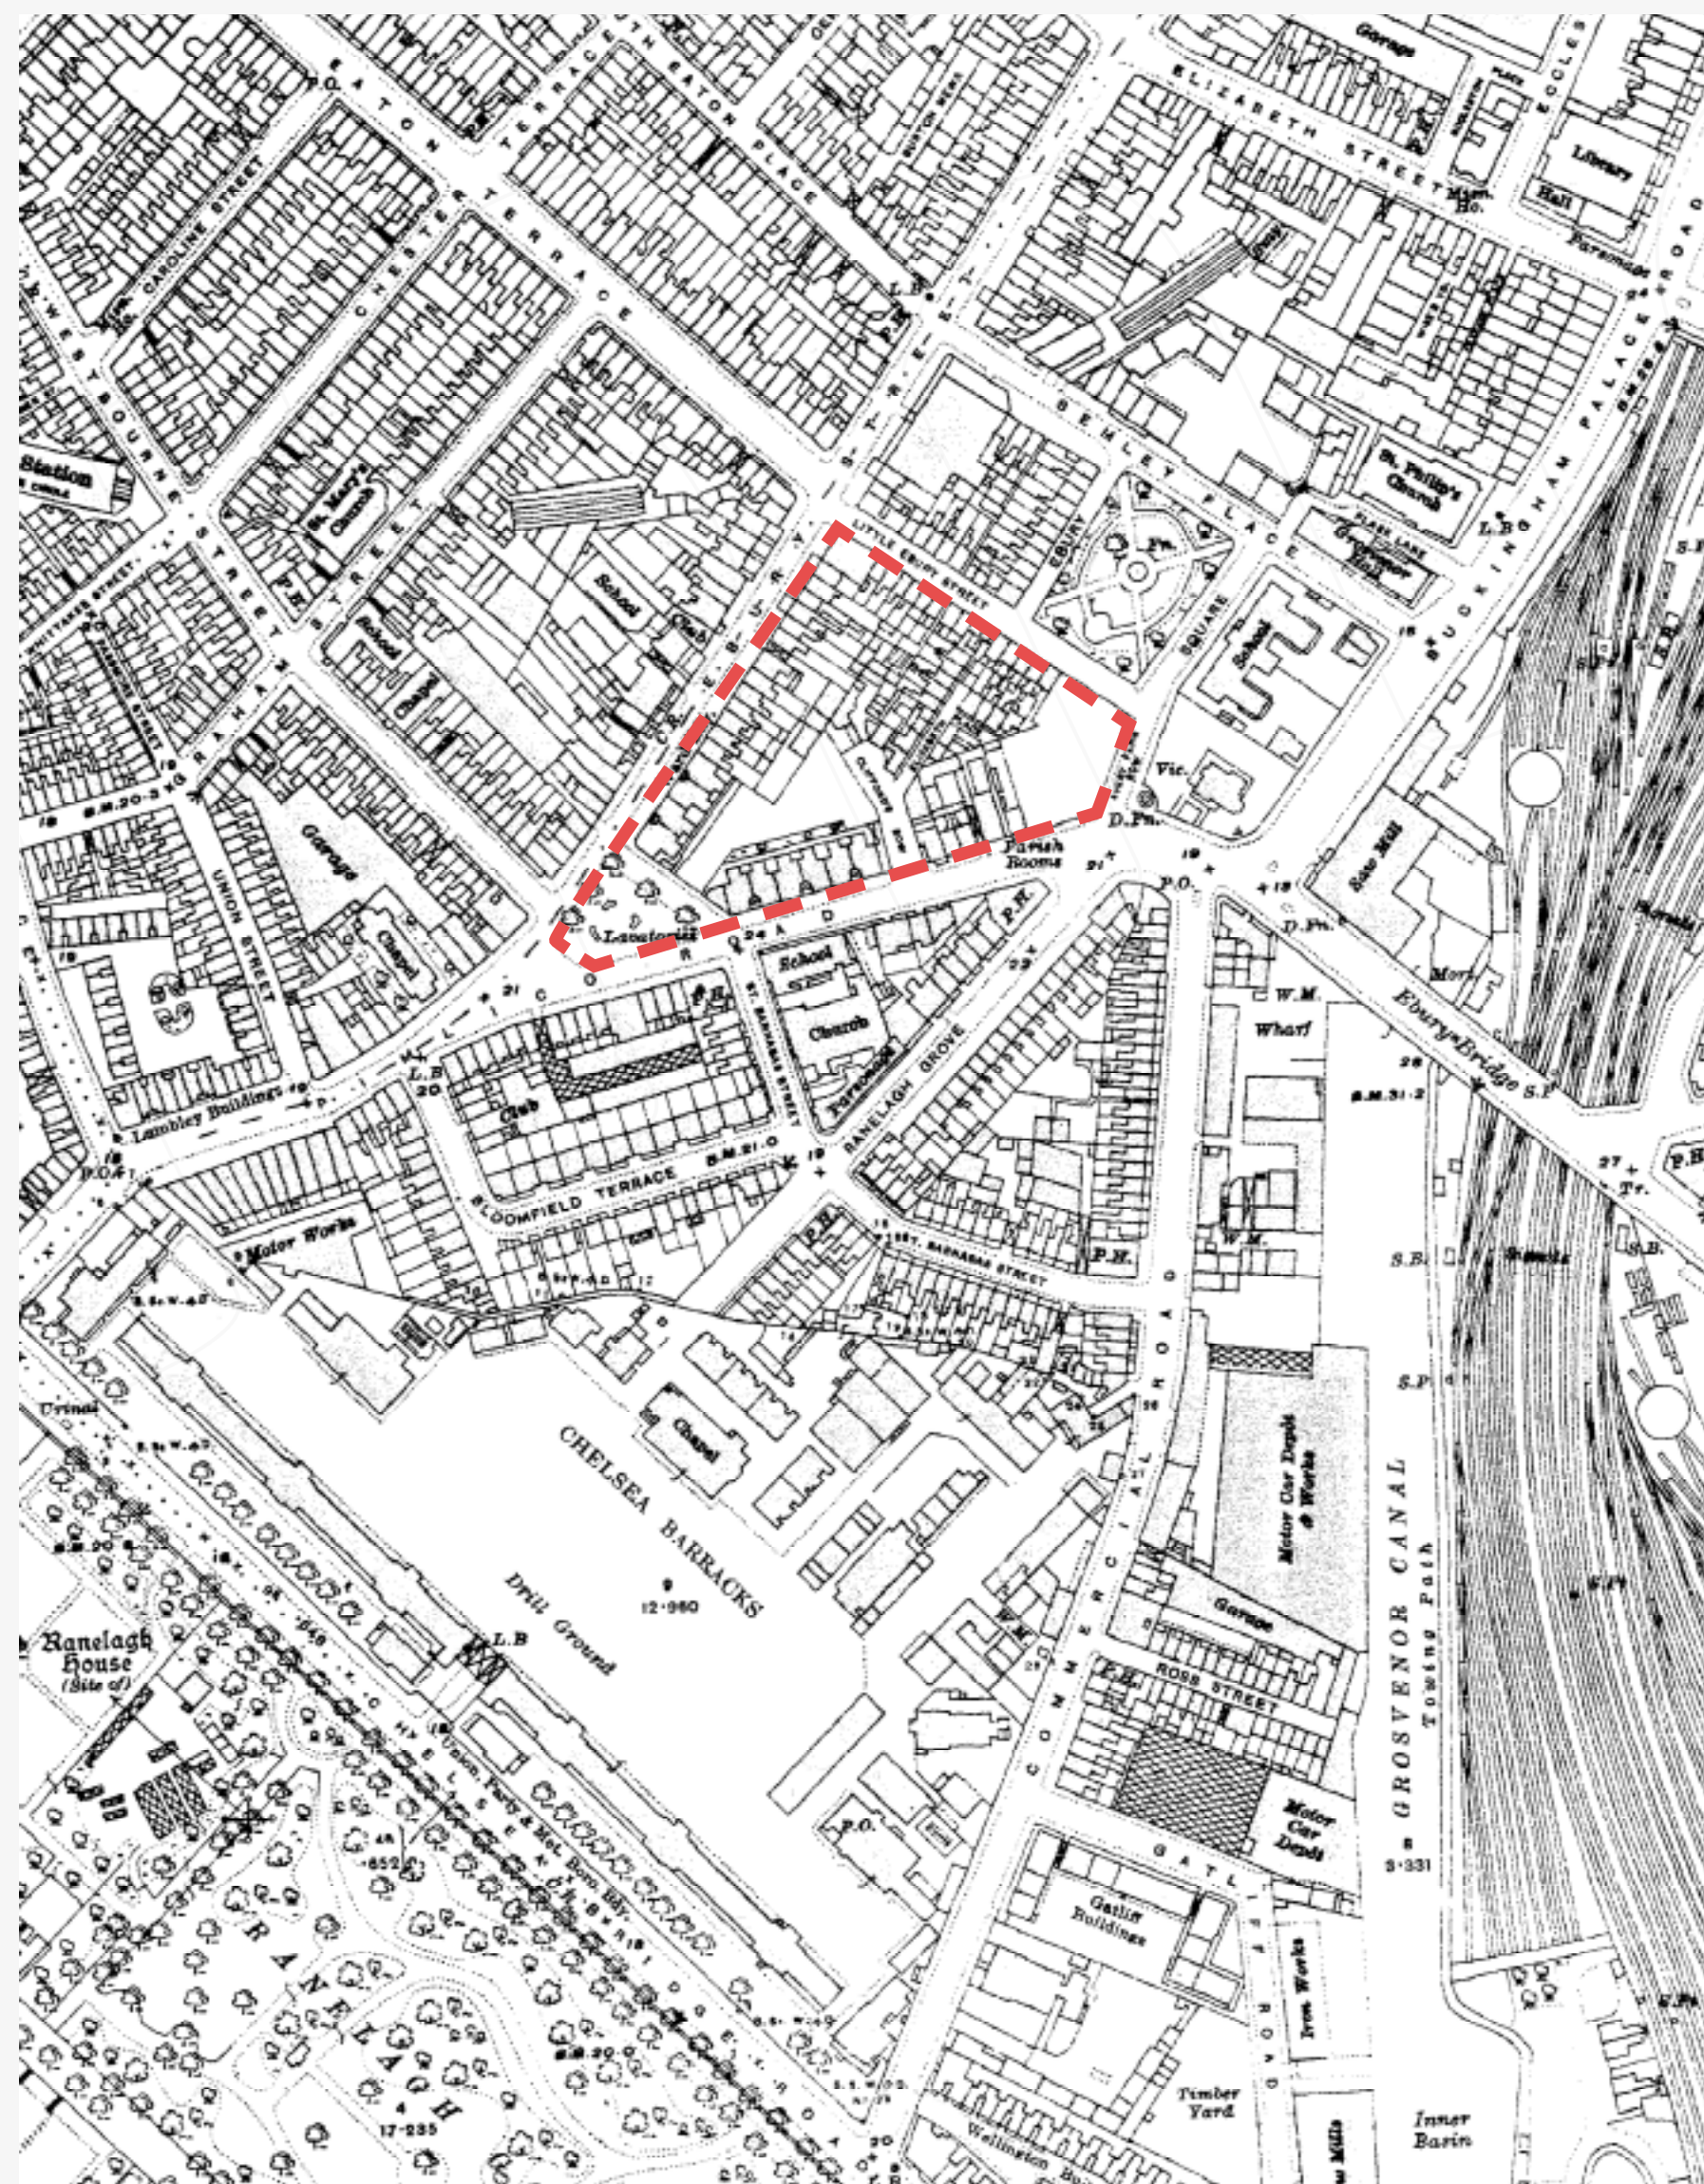

1880s

The southern area of Cundy Street Quarter was redeveloped with the construction of the Coleshill Buildings and the creation of Orange Square. In 1884, Ebury Square became a public space.

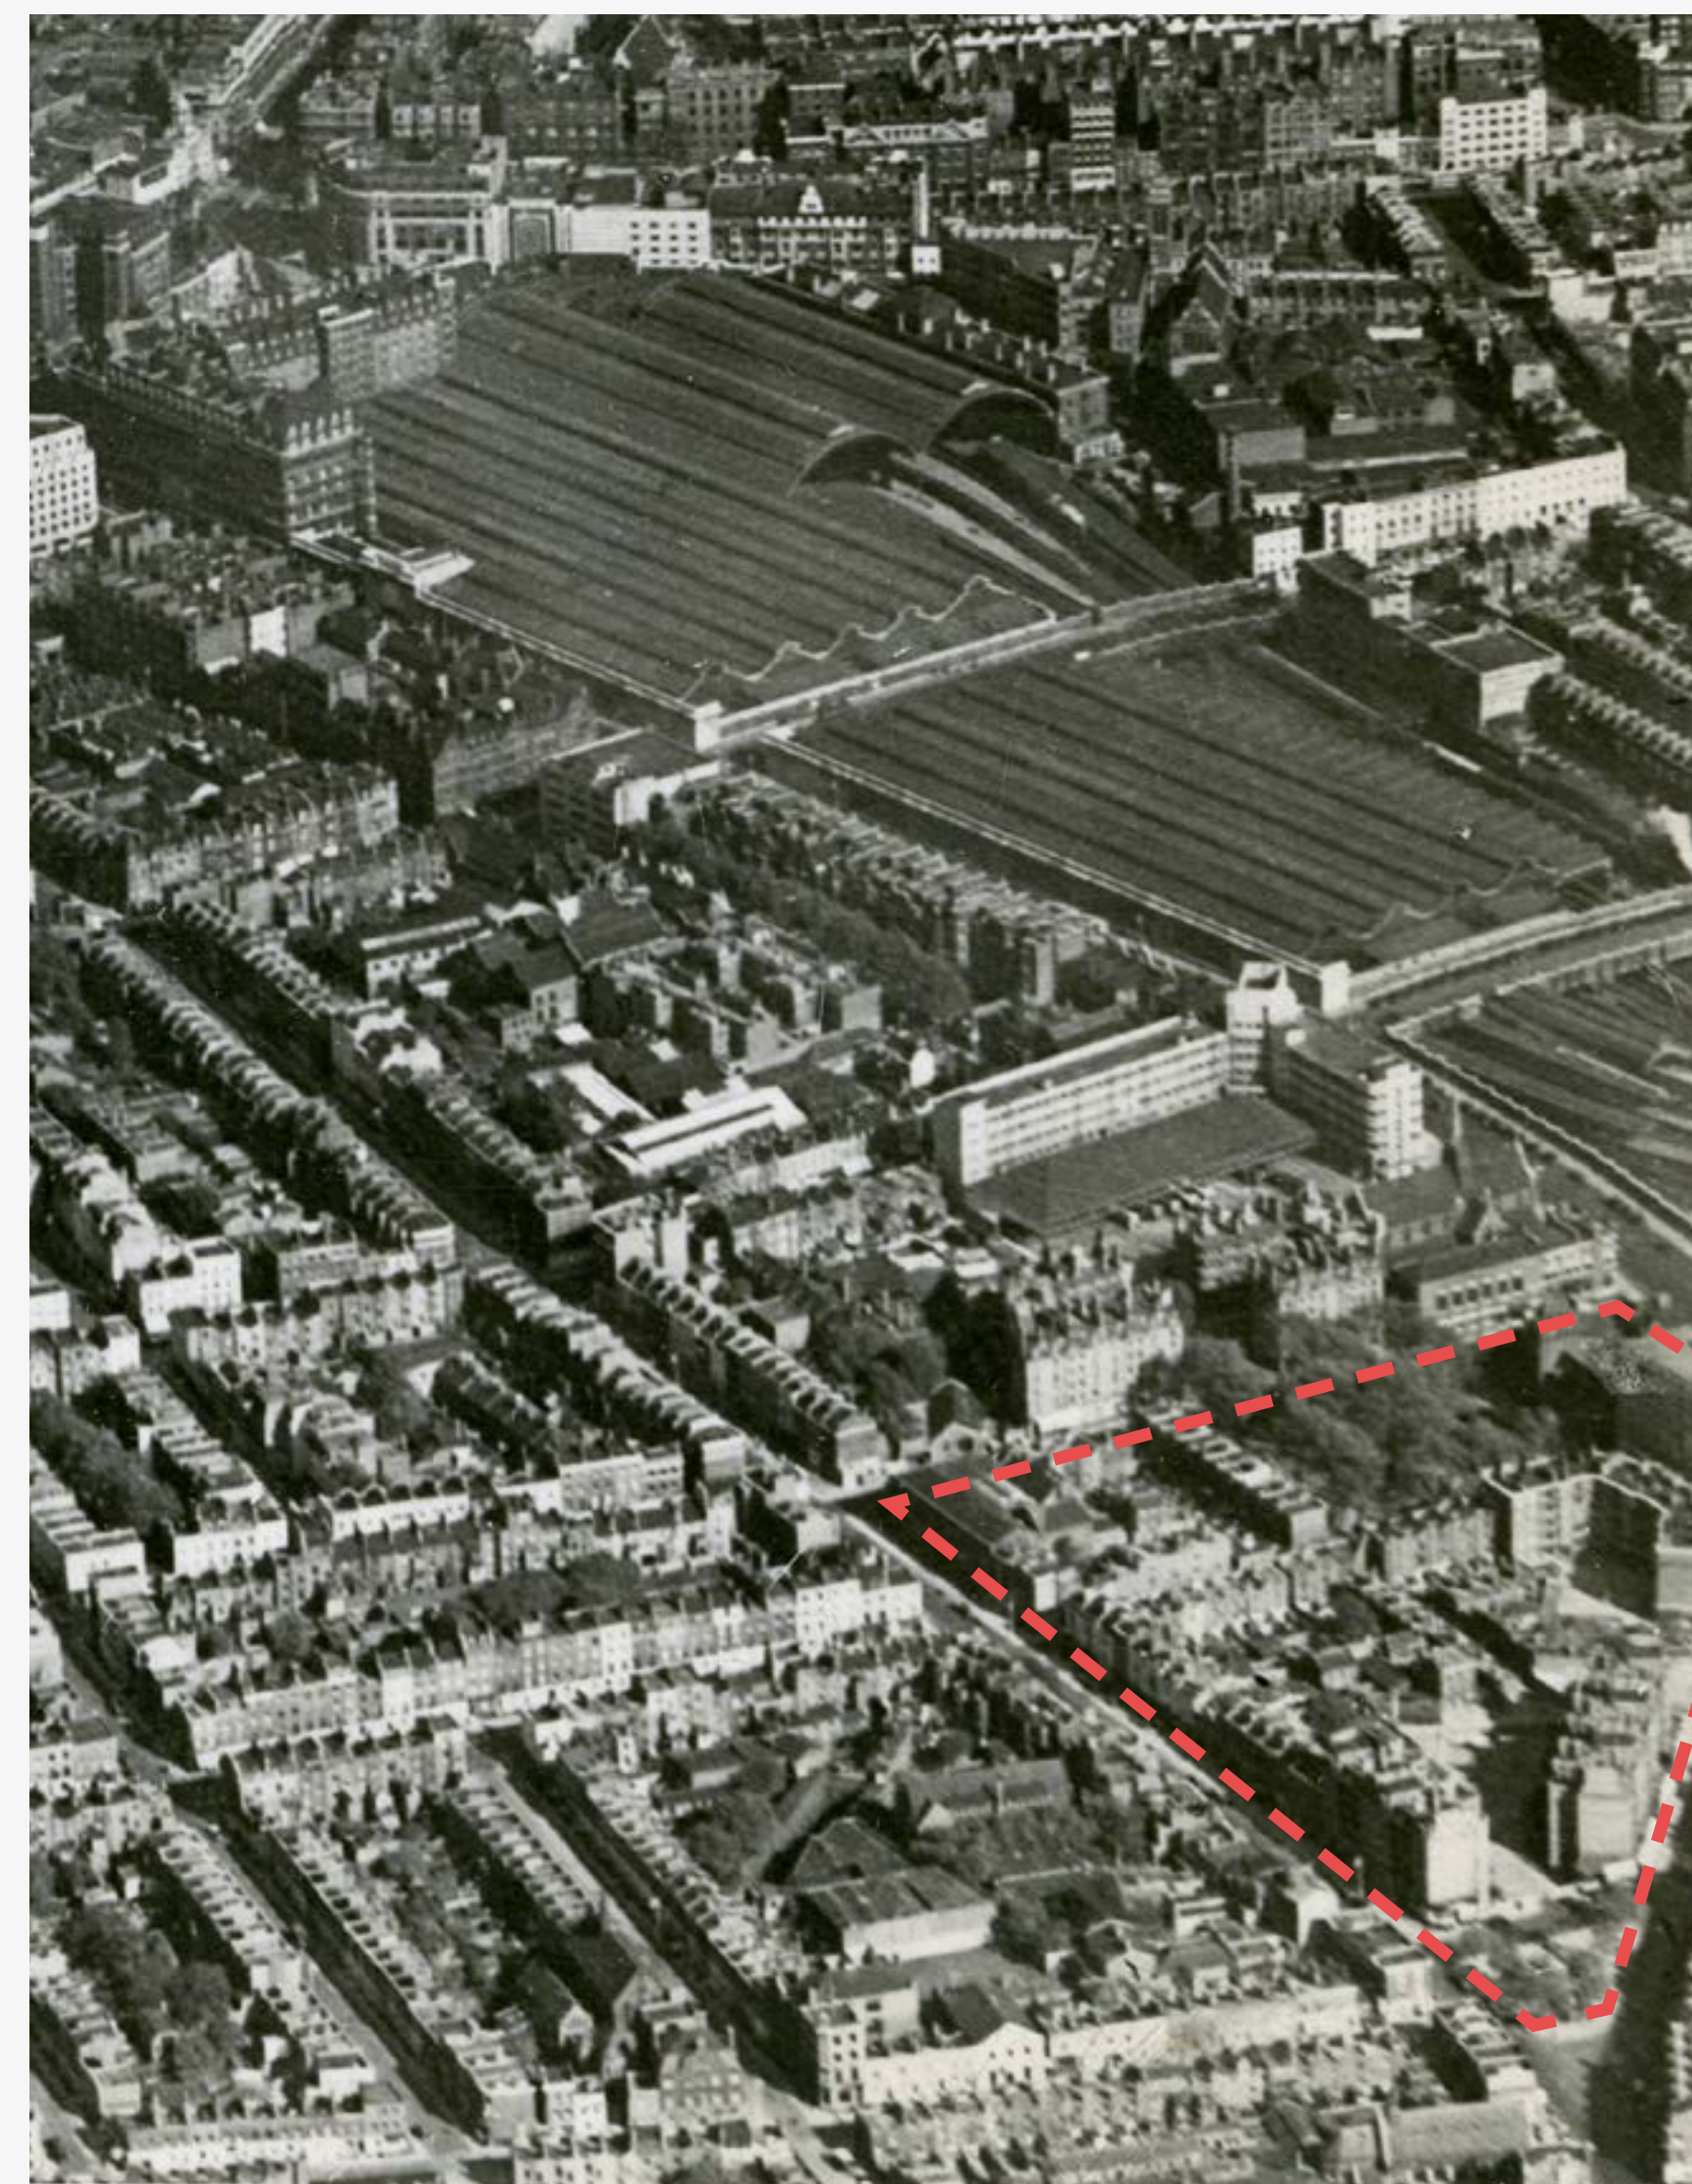

HISTORY OF THE CUNDY STREET QUARTER

1920s

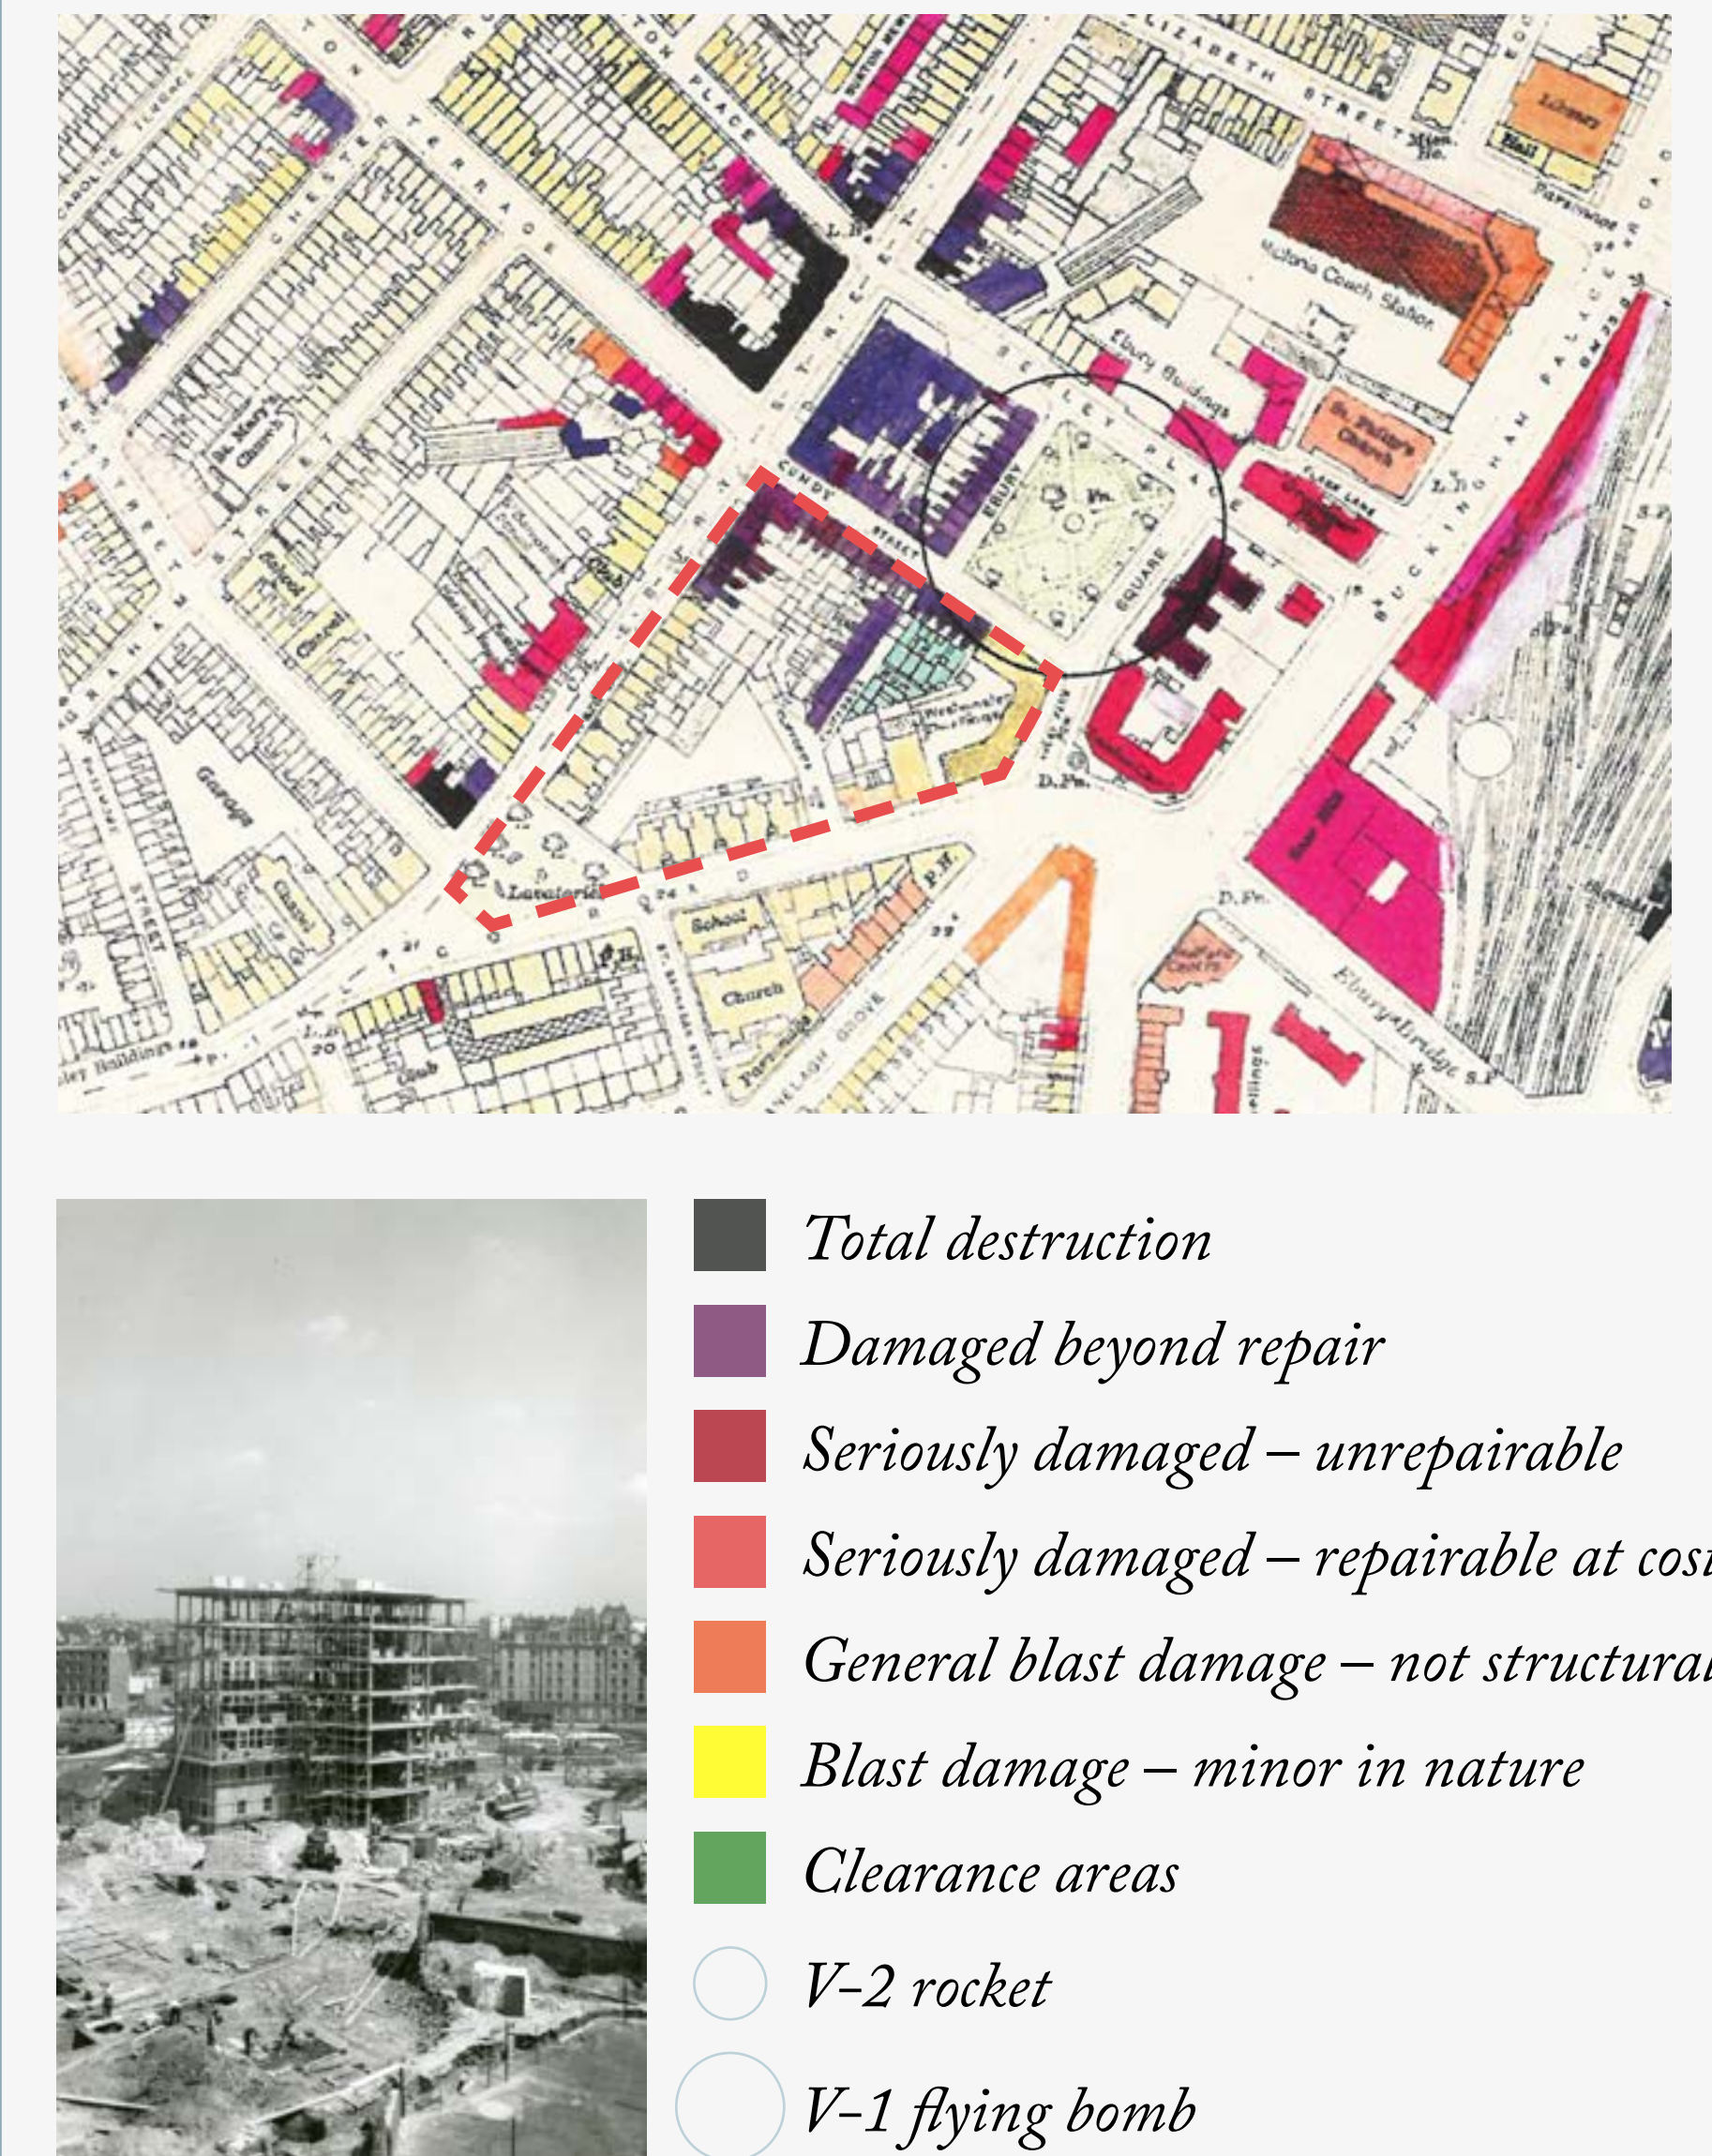

Major development occurred in the area, including Walden House and Fountain Court.

1930s

Little Ebury Street was renamed Cundy Street, after the architects who oversaw the design, planning and construction of Belgravia during the 19th Century.

1950s

The Cundy Street flats were built during a period of austerity and rationing following the Second World War.

FINDINGS FROM OUR INITIAL CONVERSATIONS

We have had several initial conversations with people who live or work locally about their perceptions of the area and their journeys through it.

Some of the findings from this exercise are:

- The area is quiet and safe.
- There is a lack of local, small grocery and convenience shops.
- The area is well-connected but there is little outdoor seating.

- There are very few spaces for activities and clubs, as well as spaces for community gatherings/events.
- There are a lack of green spaces or areas for children.
- The farmers' market is well used.

"I don't generally walk through Ebury Square as it feels empty after dark."

Orange Square is very popular amongst residents on Saturday mornings with the farmers' market.

Elizabeth Street and Sloane Square are popular destinations.

Journeys recorded show a strong north-south axis to and from Victoria station.

The red lines on the map show how the people we spoke to were travelling through the area
